"Diaries of a Dying Man" -- sequential -- by Joshua Kline ...

The Diary of a Dying Man is a perfect example of the saying that truth is stranger than fiction. In fact, much of what happened to the author is unbelievable. Basically, it's about a survivor, a man who is naively generous to a fault. Despite the traumas his generosity causes, he feels that, in each instance, he did the right thing.

"Diaries of A Dying Man" By Joshua Kline

It took a little time for me to realize at some subconscious level I was beginning to see myself as a dying man. I needed to change that. I am NOT a dying man. I am a living man, dealing with some medical issues. I needed a break to get my head straightened out. That is still a work in progress. Again sorry for any worry I have caused.

I deal with the topic of death head-on in an unflinching way. I believe that, as a culture, we shy away from anything surrounding death and, consequently, deprive ourselves of all the lessons inherent in the dying and grieving process. We ignore the reality that death is as much a part of life as birth.

Diary of a Dying Man

A lively succession of friends, artists and writers came to visit Soutar in his bedroom. He recorded these events, along with his own thoughts, political views, dreams and creative processes in his diary, his journal, a dream book, a common-day book and, at the very end of his life, a record which he called The Diary of a Dying Man.

When facing death, he is able to achieve much more than the average healthy person distracted by the world. All is truly in divine and perfect order with the dying, but very few understand it. This slow death of the human ego is the birth of life and beauty as his eternal self emerges on earth in fabulous fashion on his way through it.
